The International Labour Organization (ILO) was established in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles, in the belief “that universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice.” In July 1961 it had 100 countries as members, including all the great powers. A unique feature of this organization is that its meetings are attended not only by representatives of governments, but by representatives of employers and working people as well, and these participate in the proceedings, by voice and by vote, independently of their governments. The principal policy-making body, for instance, is composed of four delegates from each member state, and of these, two represent the government. One represents employers, and one working people. The organization has, from the beginning, taken steps to collect full and up-to-date information about labour and social conditions throughout the world and to pass on the results to member states in the form of statistics and reports.

102. As we learn from the passage, the International Labour Organization (ILO) was founded in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles, ----.

- A) in the hope of persuading people to vote and act independently of their governments
- B) with a view to establishing good relations between employers and governments
- C) to fund research into working conditions throughout the world
- D) to collect statistical evidence relating to different approaches to social justice
- E) as a part of the effort to make a permanent and all-inclusive peace

103. The writer points out that, as an international organization, the ILO is extremely unusual ----.

- A) as it is allowed to investigate social conditions worldwide, even among non-member countries
- B) since all member countries must send at least four delegates to all meetings, and more if they wish
- C) since it has an ever-increasing membership, especially of the developing countries
- D) because, at the meetings, some delegates do not represent their governments but participate and vote independently
- E) as its sources of income are varied and mostly consist of the contributions made by industrialized countries

104. According to the passage, one of the functions of the ILO has always been ----.

- A) to educate the work force in the principles of social justice
- B) to make labour more informed about its international rights
- C) to collect and share data concerning social conditions and labour worldwide
- D) to create similar working conditions throughout the member countries
- E) to encourage the representatives of the employers and the employees to stand up against their governments

105. – 107. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

An entrepreneur is a risk-bearer. The risks taken by entrepreneurs arise from uncertainty. Economic conditions are always changing, and past experience is not necessarily any good guide to future prospects. Most production is undertaken in anticipation of demand. Firms will produce those things which they believe will yield a profit – they do not know that they will do so, because the future is unknown. Entrepreneurs must bear the costs involved during the time which elapses between the decision to produce and the eventual marketing of the commodity. They must pay rent for their land, interest on money borrowed, wages to labour and meet the costs of materials. These payments must be made without any certainty that the costs will be covered by receipts. If the sales revenue exceeds their expenses, the entrepreneurs will make a profit – if not, they must bear the loss.

105. The main point made in the passage is that the entrepreneur ----.

- A) can never be sure that any venture will succeed until it has actually done so
- B) makes a loss as often as he makes a profit
- C) soon becomes a good judge of economic trends and rarely makes mistakes
- D) is a sound businessman and doesn't take risks
- E) is prepared to pay high interest on money borrowed

106. According to the passage, a great many expenses have to be met by the entrepreneur ----.

- A) and these increase dramatically once the product is on the market
- B) but he is sure that his profits will exceed his expenses
- C) but the biggest one is labour costs
- D) before a product even goes onto the market
- E) and he is very rarely offered a loan

107. We understand from the passage that the success or failure of a product ----.

- A) is always purely a matter of luck
- B) is closely related to the quality of the materials used
- C) can be fairly accurately judged soon after it goes into production
- D) is of little importance to the experienced entrepreneur
- E) becomes apparent only after it has gone onto the market

108. – 110. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

The loss of job satisfaction, particularly in the manufacturing industries, is raising some serious social problems. In order to solve these problems, managers in many industrial countries are seriously considering various projects aimed at job enrichment. There are attempts to enlarge the role and responsibilities of the workers. Several factories have tried to abolish the assembly line by reorganizing production so that teams of workers are responsible for assembling the entire product (or a major component of it). Each team is free to decide how the various tasks will be allocated and the speed at which the job is carried out. Within each team the jobs may be rotated so as to increase the element of variety in the work.

108. It is pointed out in the passage that, especially in the manufacturing industries, ----.

- A) workers are perfectly satisfied with assembly line conditions
- B) great efforts are being made to give workers more job satisfaction
- C) workers are asking for higher wages, as they are being given more responsibilities
- D) the teams cannot organize themselves, so management has to assist them
- E) the rotation of jobs within the team has caused work to slow down

109. We understand from the passage that in several factories the assembly line is ----.

- A) being replaced by teams of workers who assemble either the whole or main part of a product
- B) coming back into fashion as workers find the work easier and less demanding
- C) still being retained since it is the ideal training ground for new workers
- D) still used when procedures are particularly complicated
- E) felt to produce a higher standard of product, allowing manufacturers to make a higher profit

110. It is clear from the passage that, under the new teamwork system, workers ----.

- A) have the opportunity of being promoted and even becoming managers
- B) find they can work faster than they expected
- C) carry more responsibility and are fully involved in the process of decision-making
- D) need a more thorough training period
- E) have more responsibility in theory, but not in practice
